Ryan Hill is a dynamic professional with a diverse background spanning military service and entrepreneurship. As the Chief Operations Officer and Co-founder of Strategy Table, Ryan brings a unique blend of strategic thinking and practical leadership experience to the business world.

Concurrently serving as a Team Chief in Civil Affairs for the U.S. Army, Ryan has been honing his skills in complex problem-solving and cross-cultural communication since 2018. His military experience has undoubtedly shaped his approach to strategy and team management, providing him with invaluable insights that he now applies to the private sector.

Ryan's academic foundation was laid at Oregon State University, where he studied from 2016 to 2021 and built upon with a Masters in Creativity and Change Leadership from Buffalo State. This educational background, combined with his hands-on military experience, has equipped him with a robust skill set that bridges the gap between theoretical knowledge and real-world application.

His role as co-founder of Strategy Table demonstrates his entrepreneurial drive and his commitment to creating value in the business strategy space.

Ryan's unique trajectory from military service to business leadership exemplifies the adaptability and diverse skill set that modern leaders require. His experience in civil affairs suggests a strong aptitude for navigating complex social and political landscapes, a skill that translates well into the nuanced world of business strategy.

As we face an increasingly interconnected and complex global business environment, leaders like Ryan Hill represent the kind of multifaceted expertise that organizations need to thrive. His ability to draw from both military precision and entrepreneurial creativity positions him as a thought leader at the intersection of strategy, leadership, and innovation.
